

02 degree of Sagittarius: 'The Ocean covered in whitecaps'

Can you feel the salty air carried by the ocean wind, and see the white breakers galloping like wild things on the surface of the deep-blue sea? Here is freedom and danger combined in a powerful image.

The sea, always a source of wonder. A sea journey is the archetypal journey to distant lands, rich with discoveries and perils. The Unknown, beckoning.

There are two distinct motions here that commingle, giving the impression of a deep breathing being. Are the waves moved by the wind, or is the rough sea generating the squalls? Air and Water, mind and emotion, combine to create a thing of beauty. For good reasons Aphrodite, Goddess of Art and Pleasure, was born out of the soft foam of these waves.

Sense of adventure, creativity, watery themes. Or feeling lost at sea if not in touch with the beauty of it all.

Well, it is raining buckets here, after few hot days, and local flash flooding predicted.

Note: these writings, like all 'readings' of the Sabian symbols, are a bit of an indulgence really, because, trying to rationalize and make sense of an image, we run the risk of disempowering it.

We could do well to always remember to take in the image first, letting the psyche process it in its own non-rational way. Only afterwards read the writings or thoughts, mine and others, or attempt to verbalize your own discoveries.

Most important of all it is to observe how the sunrise degree image resonates with our individual experience of the day in question. Only then perhaps we may begin to penetrate the mystery of the Sabian symbols.
