

25 degree of Sagittarius: 'A chubby boy on a hobby horse'

This is an image of smug, lazy fun. Chubby children were not as common in low income families, in the 1920 and 30s, as they are in our consumerist, over-eating western world. Hobby horses too belonged mainly to a certain class of people who could afford expensively crafted gifts for their children.

These considerations seem to define a certain type of child here and no other: a rich little boy, lazily lolling on his brightly painted horse. He is enjoying his privileges and having the typical care free childhood that we now take for granted for our children, but that once was only guaranteed to a few.

Having a sense of one's good fortune, fully embracing the moment one is living. To relax, unwind and indulge oneself.
