

10 degree of Capricorn: 'An albatross feeding from the hand of a sailor'

Albatrosses are giant birds capable of covering vast ocean distances without ever needing to land. Masters of flight and knowing how to utilize wind power (prana) these magnificent birds endure much to attain their final goal.

On the other hand the sailor had to build a boat in order to cover the same watery distances, his intellect having to work hard to compensate for his lack of connection with the greater life, that force that effortlessly guides the albatross.

The sailor here has formed however a special relationship with the bird, sharing his food (substance) with him, thus bridging the conventional gap between species.

This image shows the possibility of creating a wonderful bond between rational man, the smart sailor, and his instinctual self, the albatross, in touch with the vital breath of life and capable of feats a mere human, no matter how clever, could ever perform.
