

26th degrees of Scorpio: 'Indians making camp'

This sentence conjures up images of a nomadic life, free spirited tribes moving places from season to season, following the herds in search of greener pastures. Open spaces, charted not by highways or maps, but by centuries of experience; survival skills passed on from generation to generation.

Making camp suggests the need for a collective effort, guided by a sense of community; also showing the advantage of remaining flexible to successfully adapt to life's changing circumstances, like a wild creature or a tribal person attuned to Nature's seasonal rhythms.
