

5 degree of Capricorn: 'Indians rowing a canoe and dancing a war dance'

This seems to be an outward display of aggressive instincts designed to threaten the enemy, making a clear and loud show of power (the rowing) and defiance (the dance).

What I read here is the need to be bravely assertive, not alone, but with the support and solidarity of allies, people who are on our side, fighting for the same cause.

The function of war dances was to encourage and embolden the warriors, making them feel the collective strength of the group fighting with them, and the power of the cultural myth sustaining all of them.
