

8 degree of Aquarius: 'Beautifully gowned wax figures'

These wax figures are just imitations, effigies of real people, their beautiful gowns providing external values to replace the inner values they lack.

These mannequins have no soul, no substance. The skill of the person who crafted them creates the temporary illusion of a life force that is not there.

This to me is an allegory of the self-image we put on display when socializing, going through the motions expected of us and adhering to the prevalent expectations of the time and place we live in. These are necessary props to function in a physical world, not be confused with the life that runs through us, the naked truth about our true soul-being.
